David & Megan,

Attached is a presentation from UM's Transportation Economics, Energy, & Environment meeting last week on VMT. Lang Sui uses the American Time Use Survey to examine in micro detail how & when people use their vehicles. It may be of interest, both the information she pulled together and the data source. It may be more reliable than the NHTS for daily trips, because it asks people to document how they use their time, rather than asking about trips that they may not remember.

The video she took out, on slide 5, shows how activities vary over time. It's very cool to watch, though maybe not critical information; see below if you're interested in getting it.

Hi Dr. Helfand,

Thank you for your interest and email. Please find my presentation attached to this email. I took out the video because it is too large to send. If you would like the presentation with the video, I can send it to you via Google Drive.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Thank you,

Dr. Sui,

I really enjoyed your presentation at UM's TE3 meeting last week. As you probably know, we here at EPA are very interested in the present and future of VMT. Would you be willing to share your slides and/or paper with me and others here at EPA?

Thank you!
